THE PEAK RIDGE BATTLE.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE FIGHT.

Realistic Valor of Western Troops.

Returns of Killed and Wounded.

Bismarck, March 11.

In Vol. 10, March 11, 1862.

A messenger arrived at 10 o'clock last night bringing some additional news of the battle.

The engagement took place on Little Sugar Creek, five miles this side of the stream of that name, where the skirmish took place.

ALL our letters, including my heart, satisfied several days ago.

STILL LIES FROM THE DEATH OF THE BATTLE OF THE PEAK.

WOLFE, MINNIE, MARCH 11th.

OF COLONEL REMOND'S.

THE WHO KILLED AT THE BATTLE OF THE ARKANSAS, arrived here yesterday, his brother, and two or three men, who left the battle-ground following the battle.

They represent the contest a terrible one. The rebels for a long time in their camp, and the fact that they had gained 3,000 Indians under

THE EVACUATION OF NEW MADRID.

THE SITUATION ON THE MISSISSIPPI

"WE MEET AT NO TEN."

The dispatches of General Pope announcing evacuation of New Madrid, made that victory certain, and perhaps it was fortunate we wished to believe it. If it had been otherwise, our position would have been the march down.

In anticipation of an attack on the south, Gen. Curtis ordered the trains drawn up to the north side, but unexpectedly that attack was commenced on the rear, north of our camp, by 3,000 to 4,000 rebel cavalry. Gen. Sigel, with 800 men, resisted the attack for several hours, alternately retreating and stopping to hold the rebels in check, while the trains pushed backward to the main body of the army. While thus engaged Sigel was three times surrounded, but cut his way through each time. The principal fighting on the morning of the 6th, Signel's division.

On Friday the engagement became general and continued so, our officers behaving themselves gallantly and bravely. Our most exposed position being occupied by Col. Carter's division, the greatest loss was suffered by

At first we can take from 100,000 to 500 and 800 to 1,000 wounded, whom we came into their hands, and sent them to the hospital, their clothing, shoes and blankets were all taken from them.

We took 1,000 prisoners and of artillery, ten of which were taken from the hands of the rebels' brigades.

Two of our cannon, belonging to the 1st Missouri Cavalry, were taken by the rebels captured by our troops.

The rebels were completely routed under Price leading the advance, and then under Van Dorn, who was killed at the battle of Helena. One of our soldiers was taken prisoner; says he saw Camp Jackson shortly after General Pease made the residences of Colonel C. Commerce, a few miles above the mouth of the river, his headquarters. He took his march across the country in the direction of a description most favorable to the cause. Within three or four days he had taken the place which he intended to hold. There were many men in his force, and our readers will still find it was deemed necessary to march away from there. He was followed to Charlestown, where he was met by John Pope. The only other force that was sent to meet them was that of General Fremont, a piece of artillery, company of engineers, and a battery commanding the river.

Our readers will find the official report of General Pease regarding his success, and the following is a translation of the same:

Col. George's brigade, of this division, was sent to the mouth of the river, to the battery, the Thirty-fifth Illinois, Col. Phelps' Twenty-fourth Missouri, known as the "Lyon Regiment." The second brigade, commanded by Col. Vandever of the Ninth Iowa, consists of his own regiment, the Debeaux battery, and Col. Cary's regiment of cavalry.

A further report says the loss of the Fourth and Ninth Iowa, the Twenty-fifth Illinois and Phelps' Twenty-fifth Missouri are from 150 to 300 for each regiment killed and wounded. The Twenty-fourth Missouri were present, but they lost 50 killed and a large number wounded.

General Pease's division consisted of the Third Iowa cavalry and the 8th Indiana lost about 60 men each. The First and Second Iowa batteries lost about 30 each.

General Pease's division, which he had in the service of the Union, was the men, and opened at day-light on the 15th. In a few hours after the guns were darkened on us. Our

During the whole day of yesterday our lines were closer around their works under the cover of a dense growth of cotton trees, and we induced them to remain practically motionless. Their position was so well protected that we were unable to make any impression on the colors of several Arkansas regiments.

There are about fifty killed and wounded. We have lost in command of the dead, and in the hands of the enemy. A number of troops camped near across from the Missouri; some boats were beached on the island, but what they were to do, I cannot determine. The natives were in great confusion. We fired heavily at them, killed and flung battery on the shore, the burning of Matanzas. I was there in this, I saw, that persons were being taken to the shore, and that, too, spring to the shore, creating all sorts of a confusion. Gen. Smith's Advance upon the Enemy.
ST. LOUIS, March 18.—A Saratoga Transfer, dated at Fort Smith, Ark., March 17, says the Tennessee river has nearly all frozen, and that the Army of the Trans-Mississippi is proceeding farther up the river. The point of crossing is at the mouth of the Arkansas, as commanded by Gen. C. F. Smith, and the force is composed of the First and Second Divisions, and the Cavalry and Artillery, as the divisions commanders are not yet named. The force is expected to be ready to cross the river at any time, and the crossing is expected to be made at the mouth of the Arkansas. The enemy's force in this section is estimated at 10,000 men, and the force of the Army of the Trans-Mississippi is estimated at 15,000 men. The force of the Army of the Trans-Mississippi is estimated at 15,000 men, and the force of the Army of the Trans-Mississippi is estimated at 15,000 men.
